Facts:

Krishna Rajanna ran a grossly filthy abortion mill in Kansas City, Kansas. Photographs obtained by pro-lifers revealed appalling conditions that included blood-soaked carpeting in procedure rooms and improperly sterilized surgical instruments, which were stored next to a blood-stained open toilet where aborted baby parts were allegedly flushed.

Most shocking, however, was news that clinic employees told a Kansas City Police Detective that Rajanna had been seen mixing aborted baby parts into his lunch. That detective testified of what he saw and heard at Rajanna's mill before the Kansas Legislature in support of stricter clinic regulations.

In February, 2005, the KSBHA fined Rajanna a mere $1,000 after considering the case for nearly two years. Pressure brought by pro-life groups, including Operation Rescue, during debate on a bill that would have required abortion mills be regulated spurred the KSBHA to suspend Rajanna's medical license in March, 2005. Rajanna's abortion mill closed soon after.

The decision to revoke Rajanna's license came after the Board determined that Rajanna could not practice medicine unsupervised.
